UK Trade Leaks and Secondary Infektion:
New Findings and Insights from a Known Russian Operation

By Ben Nimmo, Director of Investigations

12.2019
Executive Summary

On December 6 - acting on information shared by Graphika - Reddit banned 1 subreddit and 61 accounts that the company believed were "part of a campaign that has been reported as originating from Russia." Twelve of the accounts had been involved in amplifying a high-profile leak of UK government trade documents; many of the remaining had not been previously exposed.

Graphika analyzed the new accounts and identified 44 stories launched by the Russian operation between October 2016 and October 2019. Many of the stories were demonstrably false, based on forged documents or nonexistent interviews; all were amplified by networks of fake accounts across a wide range of social platforms and forums where users could post content without moderation, including the BuzzFeed Community, Reddit, Medium, quora[.]com, and fringe German website homment[.]com. This report summarizes our main findings in the hope that others in the open-source community will continue adding to the picture.

Most of the stories seemed designed to create divisions between Western countries, especially the United States and United Kingdom, but also Poland and Germany and Germany and the United States. Several stories seemed aimed at undermining German Chancellor Angela Merkel and French President Emmanuel Macron. A cluster of articles spread alarming rumors about the 2018 Winter Olympics in South Korea, games from which Russia had been banned for doping.

Two stories focused on political controversies in the United States: the smear campaign against former US Ambassador to Ukraine Marie Yovanovitch in 2019 and the "dossier" of claims against US President Donald Trump in early 2017. In both cases, the stories were presented in a way that seemed designed to undermine the United States abroad, rather than dividing it at home.

None of these stories gained significant traction. This operation struggled to place its content in front of real users, perhaps in part because of the measures it took to hide the true identity of its operators, such as the use of single-use burner accounts.

The discovery of these new Secondary Infektion assets and stories is important for what it reveals about the scale, scope, and tactics used in this operation. The accounts suspended by Reddit reveal an operation that covered a three-year span, used hundreds of accounts, posted over 40 false stories in at least six languages, and targeted a wide range of cleavages in and between Western societies. This was a sophisticated and well-resourced operation.

This discovery is also important for what it says about the limitations of information operations. With the notable exception of the UK/US trade leaks, the stories planted online throughout the three years of this campaign gained little to no traction. Some were openly mocked by real users; many were simply ignored.
All the earlier stories were based on forgeries. Some were carefully crafted, others were laughably inept, but all were false. Almost all these stories fell flat. By contrast, the leak of genuine UK trade documents was one of the headline moments of the UK election campaign and made the news well beyond British shores. As the 2020 US presidential election approaches, it is vital to be wary of potential interference, but it is equally important to understand what forms of interference are most damaging.

As this report goes to press, it is still unclear how the documents were obtained, whether by genuine leaking from an inside source or through some form of cyber intrusion.

This report is divided into three sections. The first describes three key stories from the Russian operation that are of special political relevance. The second provides a chronological overview of each new story run by the operation, together with a list of where the stories ran. This list is likely to be incomplete: as ever, we look forward to others using this work to continue the collective investigation and analysis of this campaign. Finally, the appendix describes the original Secondary Infektion findings, including the tradecraft the operation used that is of relevance to the latest finds.
Additional Assets from Reddit: General Features

On December 6, 2019, Reddit named 61 accounts that it had identified as being tied to the Russian operation. Two of these, u/gregorator and u/ostermaxnn, had specifically been involved in spreading the US/UK trade leaks in October 2019. Thirteen more, created that day, appear to have been set up for the sole purpose of up-voting the original posts. A further eight were involved in disseminating false stories. Those stories had already been exposed in the original Secondary Infektion report, in June 2019.

This leaves 38 accounts that were neither associated with the trade leaks nor part of previously documented Secondary Infektion forgeries. They constitute a new trove of assets that expose many more false stories planted by the same operation. Reddit banned the accounts but left them visible online, “so that researchers and the public can scrutinize them to see for themselves how these accounts operated.”

The articles posted by the 38 new accounts covered the following main topics, in descending order of frequency:

- Ukrainian politics: 7 articles, including one on former US Ambassador to Ukraine Marie Yovanovitch
- Hillary Clinton and the 2016 election: 6 articles
- Angela Merkel: 5 articles, with a special focus on migrants
- Winter Olympics in South Korea: 5 articles, all painting an alarming picture of the security situation ahead of the Games
- UK “interference” in U.S. elections: 2 articles
- Brexit and Northern Ireland: 2 articles
- Emmanuel Macron: 2 articles
- NATO: 2 articles
- CIA “interference” in Africa: 2 articles
- Georgia: 2 articles
- NGOs as intelligence assets: 1 article
- Turkish referendum: 1 article
- Russian opposition leader Alexei Navalny: 1 article
- Kaspersky antivirus: 1 article

The accounts posted articles or comments in the following languages:

- English: 26 articles
- Spanish: 4 articles
- German: 4 articles
- French: 2 articles
- Russian: 2 articles
- Ukrainian: 1 article

The earliest persona identified on the basis of this set began posting on October 21, 2016: this was the persona Lukas Esmeraldas,\(^2\) the only asset in this set to post multiple articles over a period of months. Graphika identified this persona in the course of the investigation. The most recent persona was created on October 21, 2019, the same day as the operation launched the UK trade leaks; it was called u/Defiant_Emu and was posted in Russian about opposition leader Alexei Navalny.\(^3\)

Reddit’s decision to leave the accounts visible means that a trove of information is now available to open-source researchers. Basic information, such as the creation date and time and content of the posts, are readily available.

These accounts can still be scanned using tools such as redective[]com. This reveals curious extra features commonly indicative of spam: for example, u/McDownes, illustrated above, was created at 9:51:14 am (ET) on March 28 this year, posted its only comment exactly one minute and ten seconds later, and was never used again.

Profile information and posting details for u/McDownes, from redective[]com.

Many of these accounts posted identical stories to a number of different subreddits, in a clear attempt to spread the message across the platform. These attempts largely failed, as the great majority of posts gained only a handful of votes, if any.
Profile information for u/lauraferrojo. Note the match between the creation date and the posting dates, the 11 minute gap between account creation and the first post, the way it posted the same article five times in less than an hour, and the way the five posts together scored just three up-votes.

Because of this rapid-fire posting, many of the operation’s stories were blocked and removed automatically as soon as they were made, because they were suspected of being spam. It is unclear whether the operators of Secondary Infektion made any attempt to circumvent this blocking by contacting the moderators; they certainly continued posting very quickly after they created their accounts. The operation’s most recent confirmed account, the evocatively named u/Defiant_Emu, created on October 21, 2019, also follows this pattern, with a first post shared 18 minutes after its creation.

March 25, 2019: Ukraine, Corruption, and US Politics

The operators behind this campaign clearly paid attention to the news in the US and adjusted their operation to take advantage of developing divisive issues. On March 20, 2019, The Hill columnist John Solomon interviewed Ukraine’s Prosecutor General Yuriy Lutsenko and reported the claim that the then-US Ambassador to Ukraine, Marie Yovanovitch, had handed Lutsenko a list of Ukrainians who were to be shielded from prosecution for corruption. The claim was false: Lutsenko later explained that he had accused Yovanovitch of wanting such a list, rather than her demanding one. The false claim featured prominently in Yovanovitch’s later testimony to the investigation into US President Donald Trump’s possible impeachment.

Eight days after Solomon’s article broke, on March 28, 2019, an asset from this campaign u/McDownes, posted a comment and two URLs under a Politico article on corruption in Eastern Europe. Despite the Scottish surname, the user wrote in grammatically incorrect English characteristic of non-native English speakers, struggling with the possessive genitive (“the very Kiev’s authorities”) and the definite article (“acting only under the US instructions”).

The first URL pointed to the Politico article, but the second linked to a Medium post from a user called @tosealy, dated March 25. This post made the sensational claim that a photo of the

Yovanovitch list had been circulating “on Facebook communities oppositional to the current President of Ukraine.” The post provided a screenshot, but without source links. It argued that the “leak” was part of a feud between then-Ukrainian President Petro Poroshenko and US President Donald Trump:11

Most likely Poroshenko himself ordered to set Yovanovitch up trying to gain support of both Donald Trump and the Republicans at the elections. However, Trump did not appreciate such an attempt. He made it clear he never forgave Poroshenko’s support of Clinton at the elections in the United States. After receiving an aggressive reaction, Poroshenko instantly passed the buck to Lutsenko, and confirmed he completely backed Yovanovitch. Yet, the last move was still made by the White House. The list of the names that were not mentioned in the sensational interview by the Prosecutor General of Ukraine has magically appeared on the web.

The account had no profile picture, and this was its only post on Medium.12 Reverse image searching on Google and Yandex failed to show any copies of the photo earlier than this one. The only account that linked to it was Reddit account belonging to this campaign. Available evidence suggests that the @tosealy Medium account was created by the same operation in order to post this one story, and that the photo was itself a fake designed to bolster the false claim about Yovanovitch.

The same English-language article appeared the same day, March 25, and under the name “Tony Sealy” or “ToSealy,” on homment[.]com,13 debatopolitics[.]com,14 southafricatoday[.]net,15 and indybaya[.]org.16 A URL showing the same headline, now deleted, suggests that the identical story was also posted to the BuzzFeed user forum.17

On March 28, a Spanish translation of the article, signed by a user named “cabradolfo,” appeared on Reddit,18 globedia[,]com,19 burbuja[,]info,20 and mediavida[,]com,21 and the following day, a German translation under the name “Ute Schaefer” appeared on meinbezirk[,]at,22 homment[,]com,23 nexusboard[,]de,24 and politopia[,]de.25

Just as in the original campaign, the personas that posted these articles were single-use accounts, set up and abandoned in a single day. u/cabradolfo posted this story for the first time just 52 seconds after account creation, while the persona on nexusboard[,]de, “UteSchaef,” was registered, last online, and last active, all on March 29.26 The specific combination of websites was also the one documented in the previously exposed Secondary Infektion Russian operation.

These articles did not appear to gain significant traction in the West. Only one Twitter user is known to have shared any of the versions (the English text from Medium) on March 30; it was not retweeted.27 The Spanish and German articles do not appear to have been shared at all. The operation clearly invested resources in translating and posting its story across languages, but there is no evidence that it tried to tweet the story to individual reporters or post it into Facebook groups, as operators behind Secondary Infektion are known to have done on other occasions.

However, also on March 29, a Russian-language edition of the article appeared under two separate bylines (Владимир Плотников and Newsnet, the latter leading to an URL including the name "Ivan Gunda") on the websites begemot[.]media and newsname[.]info. Both authors appeared to be prolific writers rather than single-use accounts. Their articles had different ledes but were otherwise identical in wording and in the URLs they embedded: both sourced the photo of the list to the homment[.]com English-language version. The articles were posted just over an hour apart, according to the time stamps.

The one significant difference from the articles in other languages was the sourcing. The English, Spanish, and German articles attributed the photo to unnamed Facebook groups; the Russian-language versions were headlined, "A new variant of the 'Lutsenko list' leaked in the Western press" and sourced the photo to the English-language homment post.

The linguistic matches are too close to be coincidental. All the different language variants were clearly translations of one another, with minimal adjustments.\textsuperscript{31} The relationship of the Russian author bylines to Secondary Infektion is unclear, but it is unlikely that two separate Ukrainian writers stumbled on the same hommet[]:com article from March 25, translated it with identical wording, and published it just one hour apart, four days later. It is more plausible to suggest that the Russian-language version, too, was the work of Secondary Infektion.

This Russian-language version was the only version to gain even modest traction. The begemot[]:media version was shared on March 29 by four Facebook pages.\textsuperscript{32} All were run from Ukraine, and they shared news articles from a wide range of sources, suggesting that they were aggregators, rather than part of the operation. The same day, a Ukrainian member of parliament posted a screenshot of the hommet[]:com English-language article.\textsuperscript{33} It was shared 51 times and reported by a handful of websites in Russian, but it did not spread to mainstream outlets.

That a known Russian information operation latched onto the false claim about Yovanovitch five days after it was launched, and tried to provide evidence to support the claim, is especially interesting because of the role that the fake list subsequently played in President Trump’s dismissal of Ambassador Yovanovitch. However, there is no indication that this “evidence” was noticed in the United States, and nothing to suggest that the operation succeeded (or even tried) to land this proof in front of American commentators. The only pickup was in Ukraine, where the story was sourced to the Western media. This suggests that the operators behind the campaign saw the Yovanovitch story primarily as a way to discredit US diplomacy in Ukraine rather than a way to interfere in US politics again.

January 25, 2017: Interview with a Spook

One of the operation’s longer-lasting storylines began in January 2017, soon after President Trump’s election. This story built up over a number of months and included at least three sets of fake accounts. The overall attempt can confidently be attributed to this operation through the specific combination of websites it used, the repeated deployment of single-use burner accounts, and, more importantly, that the first investigative lead came from two accounts that Reddit confirmed as belonging to the operation.

\textsuperscript{31} The article on newsname[]:info had a different lede but was otherwise the same text. This was the earlier of the two Russian-language posts, so it cannot have been copied and changed from the begemot[]:media version.

The content appeared flimsy and implausible, almost a parody, but the scale suggests a serious intention to turn US Republicans against the United Kingdom, similar to earlier fakes from this operation.

The first lead to this particular story came from two Reddit accounts, u/Rinzoog and u/MikeHanon, that Reddit listed as belonging to the operation. Both accounts were created on May 26, 2017, and both posted a single comment that day. According to reductive[.]com, the former was created at 6:20:24 ET and posted at 6:20:47; the latter was created at 6:29:18 and posted at 6:31:31. This is not the pattern of casual users: it is one of the trademarks of Secondary Infektion.

U/Rinzoog pointed to an article on articlesreader[.]com headlined “Evolution of Relations between Donald Trump and Her Majesty’s Secret Service,” first published on March 22, 2017. U/MikeHanon pointed to an article on a website called clickug[.]com. The URL was https://clickug.com/news/2017-03-22/news-201154-source-14864-evolution-of-relations-between-donald-trump-and-her-majesty-s-secret-service; the link is now broken, but the date and words in the URL strongly suggest that this was a copy of the same article posted the same day on another site.

Graphika searched for the headline and found the article on three other websites, all posted on March 22: Medium, indybay[.]org, and local forum dover.co[.]uk. In each case, the author only posted once; on the Dover website, the account was only registered that day. On IndyBay and Medium, the author’s name was “Thomas Cooke.”

The following day, a Facebook account called “Harry Finley” posted the indybay[]org version of the article to the libertarian, US.focused Facebook page Liberty Evolution.43 The “Harry Finley” account had no friends, made no other publicly visible posts, and gathered no engagement on its post. Its profile did not show a creation date, but its profile picture was uploaded on March 23, 2017, just half an hour before it posted its one story.

This sequence of events followed the same playbook as the known Russian operation: single-use burner accounts, Reddit accounts attributed to the operation, and websites including Medium and IndyBay.

This chain of events did not end there. The Medium article, similarly written in grammatically incorrect English and with awkward turns of phrase, centered on the claim that UK intelligence services had interfered in the 2016 US election and sourced its claim to the “dossier” produced by former British agent Christopher Steele and published by BuzzFeed44.

Interference of British intelligence in US election campaign got first heard of after former MI6 officer Christopher Steele’s shocking report on BuzzFeed. In this report ex-British spy asserted that Moscow has enormous influence on President-elect Donald Trump. Regardless of the fact there is not much credibility in the published information, it became the basis of the information campaign against Trump, which was started by the liberal media and supporters of former candidate for the post of US president Hillary Clinton.

The hook in this story came in the second paragraph, where “Thomas Cooke” mentioned an interview with an anonymous British agent, also sourced to BuzzFeed:

Later BuzzFeed also published an interview by another British intelligence officer who refused to give his name for security reasons. The MI6 officer unraveled the goals of the surveillance operation against Trump. Like the rest of the world, Great Britain was expecting Clinton to win and was developing certain agreements with her aimed at introducing preferences in trade and economic relations during the Brexit and after it. No wonder that Her Majesty’s intelligence was seeking ways to assure the victory of the candidate who was supported by Downing Street. Trump’s victory was a bitter blow to them. According to the latest news, they still didn’t recover from it.

The Medium version of the story provided a link to BuzzFeed as a source. That link is genuine and leads to an article published on January 20, 2017, but the article was not published by BuzzFeed: it was posted on the BuzzFeed Community, an uncurated site where, by the site’s own description, “anyone can create a post or quiz.”

Titled “MI6 Operative On Anti-Trump Campaign,” the article on the BuzzFeed Community was written as a conversation between interviewer “Oliverr Stonne” and “MI6 operative Richard Jones.” The article claimed that Jones agreed to the interview “as insurance in case something happened to him.”

Adding an ominous and dramatic note, the introduction to the BuzzFeed “interview” went on, “We haven’t been able to get in touch with out informer [sic] for some time, so we believe it is our duty to keep our promise and make the interview available to public [sic] for consideration.”

Several clues easily betray the fact that the interview is fabricated. At times, “MI6 operative Richard Jones” spoke like a character in Shakespeare: “I remember the election day full well” and “His commitment to the European Union is just a peacockery.”

At times, the character in the interview struggled with the word “the”: “British government staunchly supported Hillary Clinton after former PM David Cameron reached an agreement with her”; “When he won, the highest ranks in MI6 and British political elite had gone mad, and today they continue looking for the guilty.”

The character in the interview hinted at his own fears for his safety and sketched out a conspiracy between the UK intelligence service and Hillary Clinton to undermine Donald Trump:

Q. Could you expand on your assignment?
A. Searching for and, if necessary, creating the damaging and sensitive information that could harm Trump as a presidential candidate, and now as president-elect.
Q. So the work continues?
A. It has never stopped. We have a lot of prepared data on Trump that could irretrievably ruin his reputation.
Q. And you are going to publish it.
A. I don’t know whether MI6 is going to publish it or not. But this data is also in my possession and I keep it as a part of my insurance.
Q. How could the data be made available to the public?
A. By means of the U.S. media that support Clinton. We pass all information on Trump to Clinton’s team and the rest is their part.

The available evidence suggests that this evidently forged interview was planted by the operators behind this campaign. The account that posted it, “OliverrStonne,” only published this one article.46 The same article showed up three days later on indybay[.]org47 and quora[.]com,48 where it was attributed to “Matthew Wheeler.” The same day, a Reddit user called u/LewisArnott, created that morning, posted it repeatedly to popular subreddits r/the_donald and r/politics.49 According to redective[.]com, the account was created at 3:04:44 EST, and began posting at 3:05:47.

This, too, was a potentially explosive story that would, if picked up, have fed into the stormy US debate around foreign interference in the 2016 election. However, it appears that the main goal was not to stir up tensions inside the US but to provoke tensions between the US and the UK. The article attributed to the Thomas Cooke persona wrote, “it is pretty obvious that Donald Trump and \(^{50}\) https://www.facebook.com/TeenTake/posts/112960662550254.

British intelligence fell out with each other, which may trigger major problems in relations of the two countries. A separate article that can also be attributed to the operation, posted on indybay.org, liberalforum.org, and quora.com, states “The current state of affairs proves that Britain faces an international scandal which, alongside with the Brexit, will have a heavy impact on country’s reputation and economy that could suddenly lose not only its membership in the EU but its key American ally as well.”

Such stories help to illuminate the goals of the operators behind this campaign. They suggest that the operators closely followed US and UK politics, but they also demonstrate that their stories were framed to stoke geopolitical tensions more than internal turmoil.

September 28, 2017: Catalan Independence

On September 28, 2017, two days before the Catalan region of Spain held a disputed referendum on independence, a Reddit account belonging to this operation (u/lauraferrojo) posted an article to Spanish-focused subreddits r/es and r/spain and regional subreddits r/barcelona, r/catalunya, and r/andalucia. This represents one of the few Spanish posts made by operators in this campaign.

That article claimed that the EU had secretly decided that Catalonia would be allowed to join the Union after declaring independence, “even if the Government of Spain does not accept the results of the referendum.” This would have been controversial at any time, let alone two days before the referendum itself.

The article posted on the subreddits contained a screenshot of a letter attributed to the Secretary of State for Territorial Administrations, Roberto Bermúdez de Castro Mur, and addressed to Deputy Prime Minister María Soraya Sáenz de Santamaría Antón. It claimed that “our representatives in the European Parliament” had heard EU leaders promising the Catalan separatists to recognize their independence. A number of users who responded to the letter on various forums pointed out language errors uncharacteristic of ministerial speech. Like so many other screenshots posted by the operation, this one can be classified as a forgery designed to bolster the narrative laid out in the article that contained it.

The forged Spanish letter.

The amplification of the letter bore the hallmarks characteristic of the rest of this operation. The u/lauraferrojo account was created at 4:30:05 ET on September 28, began posting at 4:41:05, posted five times in 59 minutes, and then never posted again. The same text posted by this user

This story, too, failed to gain traction online. The forged letter was not reproduced on any sites beyond those it was initially posted on, and the story was not picked up by any mainstream media or political influencer.

However, the attempt to plant a story apparently designed to encourage the separatist movement in Catalonia and turn the Spanish government against the EU, just two days before the referendum, marks this as a particularly interesting attempt at sowing disinformation designed to divide and inflame Spanish and European audiences.
Appendix: Timeline of Assets and Stories

Assets are listed as "disclosed by Reddit" if they feature in the Reddit list shared on December 6, 2019 and "discovered" if they emerged during the investigation and were assessed with high confidence to be part of the same campaign. An entry as "given/discovered" indicates that the first asset was given, and subsequent ones were discovered.

Appendix | Operation Secondary Infektion

Secondary Infektion is the name given to a long-running information operation originating from Russia that Facebook initially exposed and attributed in May 2019. The Atlantic Council’s Digital Forensic Research Lab (DFRLab) found that the operation spread across at least six languages and dozens of platforms, especially Reddit and smaller blogging forums, including medium.com, homment.com, indybay.org, and meinbezirk.at.

For the purposes of this report, four identifying features of Secondary Infektion should be borne in mind.

First, the operation typically began by creating fake documents that, if real, would have caused divisions between political groups or countries. Such fakes included a screenshot of a tweet purporting to come from US Senator Ted Cruz that accused UK intelligence services of interfering in the 2018 midterm elections and a screenshot of a letter purporting to come from the Spanish foreign minister that claimed extremist Remainers were plotting to assassinate Brexit leader Boris Johnson. (To add piquancy, the letter misspelled the Spanish minister’s name.)

Second, the operation typically created accounts across a number of blogging sites on the same day, using the same name, or variations on one name (such as “Tom Taylor” and “TomTay”). In English, the sites it used most often included Reddit, Medium, beforeitsnews.com, indybay.org, debatepolitics.com, and quora.com. In German, it typically posted to Reddit, meinbezirk.at, homment.com, ask1.org, and mein-suedhessen.de; in Spanish, to Reddit, globedia.org, and burbuja.info, and in Russian to a wide range of websites that included korrespondent.net.

Third, once it had posted one story from those accounts, the operation typically abandoned them, never using them to post anything else, or even returning to them. Time and again, in the original Secondary Infektion analysis, investigators, including the author of this paper, discovered accounts that showed one and the same date for the day they were created, the day they made their one post, and the last day the user logged in.

Profile pages for Secondary Infektion assets “Tom Taylor from Braunau” on meinbezirk[.]at, top, and “TomTay” on ask1[.]org, bottom. The Tom Taylor account was registered on March 1, 2019 and contributed only one post (“1 Beitrag”). The TomTay account was registered the same day, only made one post, and last logged in (“wurde zuletzt gesehen”) on March 1, 2019.

Fourth, the operation tried to land its fake stories directly in communities and in front of individuals who might be especially susceptible to it. One German-language Twitter account repeatedly tweeted an anti-immigrant article at politicians from the anti-immigrant AfD party; the operation’s Reddit accounts posted Spanish-language disinformation to Spanish-language subreddits that were focused on politics and international relations. This approach revealed some degree of targeting and audience awareness and is an important reminder that the more advanced information operations do not simply scatter their disinformation to the winds: they pick their targets among the amplifiers whom they judge to be the most likely to fall for their stories.

However, and finally, almost all of Secondary Infektion’s original stories failed to gain traction. This is likely to be partly because they were based on forgeries, and partly because the operation created new accounts for almost every story it posted, meaning that it never began to build a loyal audience. Its stories were not picked up by users on the platforms they targeted, and they did not spread to other platforms. Secondary Infektion’s bizarre creations lived and died on the sites where they were planted, without seeding across to more fruitful soil.

This factor is especially relevant to the current report. The themes and narratives that emerge from Secondary Infektion are important for what they suggest about the operation’s intended targets: the communities and individuals to whom it posted its stories and the political fault lines that its forgeries were intended to lever open. Those fault lines remain.
